REMARKS OF THE HONORABLE BYRON DORGAN, UNITED STATES SENATOR

Lieutenant Governor, thank you very much and to all of you in the Senate, so nice to see you. I know that you are nearing the end of this session. I can only imagine how much hard work has gone into it, and I can imagine there is less appreciation for it, than there should be.

I was thinking this morning as I was coming here about a man named John Smith who I know, I do not know if he still does it, as the flying farmer from Makoti. He is in the Guinness Book of World Records, and he used to jump cars and various things. To get into the book of world records, the flying farmer from Makoti, North Dakota, drove 500 miles in reverse and averaged 36 miles an hour. I was thinking that was something like the legislative process actually. We go backwards and backwards and then all of a sudden we spring forward with a burst of productivity, and when it's all done, North Dakotans thank you very much for your service.

I want to talk just briefly today, thank you for the invitation, about two things, water and energy. We have had as you know unprecedented flooding in our state. All of you have been acquainted with it and touched by it. I am privileged in the United States Senate to chair the subcommittee on appropriations that deals with water and energy appropriations across the country, and I am very interested in and will be committed to do what we can to fund what is necessary in our state going forward and I want to talk to you about that just a bit. We see flooding in the Red River, Sheyenne, Souris, Cannonball, and James and the list goes on and on. All of us, I think, have expressed and I'm sure you have to your constituents the unbelievable inspiration that we get from North Dakotans who say let me be a part of fighting this flood. You don't have to ask me, let me be a part of this. I have been so inspired by our citizens and I know you have as well. Fighting the flood is one thing. When the floodwaters have receded, then it's time to help repair and recover, and that will require federal, state, and local efforts. Of significance in my judgment it is also time to begin discussing what more we can do to provide protection in the future and that is what I want to talk to you about just for a bit.

Let me describe to you the Red River Valley requirements as I see them. We have to do some things for the entire valley and we have to take a look at plans that would deal with water storage and there are a number of them out there. All of us have to look carefully about how we can preserve some of this water, hold some water, and store some water at critical times. But I want to talk specifically today about the issue of Fargo and Moorhead because it is our largest metropolitan area. You know that we have had plenty of flood control projects in the Red River Valley. We have a flood control project nearly completed in Wahpeton-Breckenridge, one in Grand Forks and East Grand Forks, and one in West Fargo--the Sheyenne Diversion. We have done some flood control projects. When I say we I am talking about all of us in Fargo, in the Ridgewood area and other residences as well. The fact is that even as we hold more water for storage in the Red River Valley to try to prevent as much water as comes through that river, people describe this as a table top with a scratch, the river being the scratch, and when we have the quantity of water that we have, it just spreads everywhere. Even as we do all of that, we need to decide what we do with respect to our largest metropolitan area for greater flood control protection. I make this point to you because I have heard references in various venues about the federal government's role and I want to explain it precisely because it is very important. Flood control projects that are deemed in the national interest and meet cost-benefit ratio are projects that the federal government will fund 65 percent. The construction will come from the Corps of Engineers, not FEMA, not from any other agency. The construction of flood control projects is done by the Corps of Engineers. The federal government when they are triggered and meet the test will fund 65 percent of it. But this is not a top-down process, it is a bottom-up process. Fargo-Moorhead, as an example, covers two states. You have two state governments, you have two municipalities, and there is not now a flood control plan there. There is no comprehensive proposal for flood control in the metropolitan area that has been requested of the federal government. This is bottom-up, first there has to be a consensus, between Fargo and Moorhead and Minnesota and North Dakota, about what they want to do with respect to a comprehensive flood control project. When that consensus exists there will be a feasibility study, presuming it meets the cost-benefit ratio. I will tell you that as chairman of the committee that funds all of our water projects across the country I will do everything I can and I will commit myself to funding the flood control project that is decided by the consensus of Fargo and Moorhead. We need greater flood control protection. But I just want to clear that up because I know there is discussion out there as to why hasn't the federal government built something--will the Feds step up? There is not a project. When there is a project, you have my commitment that we will fund that project provided it meets the cost-benefit ratio. Now the 35 percent local funding of any project is also significant, and you, I know, play a role in that, and I know that you have had to consider what kinds of funds you will put aside for needs that might exist in the coming biennium with respect to these flood control issues. When I say bottom-up, I will give you an example of Grafton, North Dakota. In the year 2000 I began putting money in so that we could do the feasibility study for a flood control project for Grafton, but it was determined when completed it would cost $32 million for comprehensive permanent flood control protection for Grafton. Grafton at that point held an election, and by two-to-one decided it did not want it.

At that point that flood control project is off the shelf. It is a bottom-up--it is consensus at the local level that is necessary and essential for us to address this issue. Now if the Governor and I will co-host a meeting with all of the interests involved, we can begin a process of finally determining how a consensus be developed with respect to a Fargo-Moorhead metropolitan comprehensive flood control project. I will also chair a hearing of my subcommittee in Fargo on May 27 on that subject and will determine what kinds of movement exists to try to reach some kind of consensus, but I say to you again, I commit all that is necessary to be done to make the federal revenues available to do what we need to do to protect our communities in North Dakota.

Now I want to mention to you Devils Lake. We know there is a 99 to 100 percent chance Devils Lake will exceed by midsummer its historic high. It is up to a 50 percent chance that Devils Lake will increase 4 to 5 feet by midyear. We also know that will trigger the need for additional levy protection for Devils Lake. Two years ago I began funding a Corps of Engineers evaluation of what needs to be done to increase that levy, so that preliminary work is done. The President has just asked for an emergency supplemental funding for the Department of Defense. I am going to seek to include the $125 million, that is the authorization, and the funding for the federal share of the $125 million needed to increase the levy in Devils Lake. That is a 75/25 percent project and that means that the state and local share will be $31 million roughly and that would mean historically, the way it has been divided, Devils Lake or the region of Devils Lake would have about a $15 million issue. I do not think there is a ghost of a chance that Devils Lake given what they have been confronted with for about 8 to 10 years now will have that money, so I wanted to mention to you again that that project will move forward only if there is a local sponsor and there is local funding in place. So I want you to consider that as well, because I believe we will likely get the funding in this emergency supplemental, but we have to trigger this funding in order to begin this levy process now. It is very important when you get to 1452. We need to be about moving that 1460 levy up in order to protect those folks in the Devils Lake region.

I want to mention one final point and that is the issue of energy. There is not much more that is important in our state than the issues of water and energy, and we are writing an energy bill now. I am a part of writing that bill that will do a couple of things.

One, it will require, I believe when we finish it in the next few weeks, a 15 percent renewable energy standard, or renewable portfolio standard, that is 15 percent of electricity that will come from renewable sources, in order to maximize the production of renewable energy, wind energy here for example, but also wind, solar, and biomass elsewhere, in many places where you can produce it but do not need it. In order to do that you have to have a superhighway of transmission capability that connects all of our country, and we are going to not only do an RES that will maximize and drive additional production of renewable energy, but we are going to write a bill that deals with the issue of planning, siting, and pricing, with respect to transmission. Think of this, in the last 9 years we have produced in this country 11,000 miles of natural gas pipeline. Eleven thousand miles of natural gas pipeline, in the same 9 years we have been able to build only 680 miles of high-voltage transmission that is interstate. That is a failure, we just cannot get it done given the current circumstances, and we are going to have to rewire and short circuit a bit. There will be a front-end substantial planning process with all the jurisdictions having the opportunity that if it does not work there has to be a short backstop of some type so that we can build that transmission. It is the only way we will maximize renewable energy coming from North Dakota. It is the only way we will maximize wind energy, for example. Otherwise we will have stranded wind energy we can produce, but we do not need. In addition to RES and transmission, I support very much additional drilling, especially in the area where the drilling will be the most productive for our country and that is the Gulf of Mexico and especially the Eastern Gulf. I am pushing very hard for that and the McKenzie study shows that the quickest and easiest and most effective way to get energy is to save energy and that is retrofitting buildings. By far that is the lowest hanging fruit with respect to energy policy in our country, and finally 50 percent of all this electricity comes from coal. Those who suggest that we are not going to use coal in our future do not have the foggiest idea of what they are talking about. We need to use our most abundant resources in the future, but we need to find ways to decarbonize them. I have put $4 billion as chairman of the committee in the last 12 months in carbon capture research and science and technology so that we can find a way to decarbonize coal and continue to use the most abundant resource in our country. Let me tell you just two things that are very interesting to me. I have people from all over the country coming to say to me, we have the secret, the silver bullet, we have the secret of how to capture carbon. There is a man right now who has 200 scientists working on this plan. They are developing synthetic microbes that they will place underground that will eat the coal, that is not by the way a technical description. The synthetic microbes will consume the coal and the coal will become methane gas. Isn't that exciting? I do not have the foggiest idea whether they will get that done, but Dr. Craig Venter is doing it. He is one of the few guys that created the human genome project. The idea is for synthetic microbes to consume coal and turn coal into methane gas. There is a guy in California that has patented the process right now to chemically keep carbon from fuel gas at a coal plant and turn it into a product that is harder and has higher value than cement or concrete, which he says will lower the cost of carbon to near zero. Maybe that is the silver bullet, I do not know. My point is this, I was in a roundtable conference with a bunch of folks here awhile back at Newseum and Al Gore was one of them. He said we want to be 100 percent renewable by 2020, not going to happen, not even close. We need to continue to use our most abundant resource, but to be able to do that we have to unlock the technology and the ability to decarbonize coal and we are going to do that. I believe North Dakota has an enormous stake in it.

One final point, when the energy bill is completed in the Senate in the coming weeks, or at least the coming couple of months, we will also take up what is called the climate change and cap and trade. We in North Dakota have a huge stake in that, in terms of the cost of electricity and in terms of the impact on our consumers. I am not a very happy person about this issue of creating a trading regime for our carbon. I have seen what happened to the futures market for oil last year. Speculators got ahold of it and drove it to $147 per barrel in day trades. I am not very happy about this issue of cap and trade, and we need to get this right. It is one thing to try to preserve this country's environment--we should and we will--and it is another thing to do it the right way. I voted against the closure on the climate change bill last year, because I did not believe they had clawed forward enough funding to give us the ability and the technology to decarbonize coal so that we continue to use coal. I said I am not interested in voting for failure, and you will fail if you push the approach. So, we are going to have a big fight in the Congress not about whether there is some climate change or whether we should address this, but about how--how we address this thoughtfully and how we address it the right way. These are issues that will have a profound impact on the State of North Dakota, and I know you've thought about it and talked about it and perhaps debated many of these issues over the past several months. This process that you are involved in and I am involved in is something that I have great affection for and I know some do not, it is called politics. John F. Kennedy used to say that every mother kind of hopes her child might grow up to be President, as long as they do not have to be active in politics, but you know that this is an honored process within which we make judgments about our country and about our future and you play a very significant role in that and North Dakota thanks you. God Bless You.

POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

SEN. NELSON: Mr. President: I rise on a point of personal privilege.

REMARKS OF SENATOR NELSON

MR. PRESIDENT: Fifty years ago this afternoon a young gentleman from NDSU and I tied the knot. It was three o'clock in the afternoon, there were thirteen people present, and it was in my home. Gil was hoping to be here today, but little things happen; he's celebrating our anniversary in Room 532 of MeritCare Hospital in Fargo, and I'm here.

Prior to all this happening, we had planned a party for all of you. We've celebrated about nine anniversaries with you because we've been in session. So, Gil's used to me not being there on our anniversary, but this one was going to be kind of special.

Our kids have provided cake and some flowers--they're in the Conference Room, and we've invited all of you, and the interns, and the staff to come to enjoy this afternoon with us. Even though Gil can't be here, his thoughts are with you. There is a guest book out, and there's pictures of us before and after, so you can take a look at those.

I just thank you for all of your support during the last several days; it's been rather difficult. I'm glad to be back, but I'm anxious to get back home too. Thank you very much.

MOTION

SEN. O'CONNELL MOVED that the remarks of Sen. Nelson be printed in the Journal, which motion prevailed.
