TESTIMONY # 1 [m :00 – 9:23]

Q?

S Klein: Try to explicitly give the employers the rules. They may have been a little vague –

L McEvers: Yes

S Potter: The blanket authorization you're referring to, is that because its blanket covering a number of items or can it cover a specific item? i.e. every individual going to work for me, and don't return their uniform, is that the "blanket?"

L McEvers: That's what it is; something that you sign up front, saying, "If I leave and something is damaged or something is lost or stolen, you can take it from my check."

You don't know whether or not that is going to occur at the time you sign that, so you don't know what rights you're signing off to. If a policy manual says when you leave employment you have to pay for your keys when you lose your keys, now only do you not know how much it will be for that, but there is no opportunity for you to dispute that. They could do this years before they leave employment, what they are signing on. We don't see those as valid as they don't know how much they're for.

S Hacker: If those amounts were stated in the beginning, ex: "If you don't return the keys you'll be charged $100," would that change anything?

L McEvers: We still workings are that you still aren't going to know if you're signing the advance, it doesn't give the employee. Ex: truck drivers going over road, when they leave employment they must have a clean truck. What is clean? They turn the truck back in and turn it in to be cleaned and it costs $100 to be cleaned, there may be a dispute. The disagreement is an opportunity for dispute.

S Behm: Is this a direct violation of the employee?

L McEvers: Agree, shouldn't be interfering with the employers. Either have to employers have to show what the charges may be and they can sign an authorization after it occurs, so they have it deducted from their check, not in advance. Happens all the time.

S Behm: Makes good sense for this bill. They can charge you for anything they want.

S. Potter: If employers personal manual/policies specifies some sort of dispute resolution or appeals process and have a specific $ amount for uniform or keys, does that meet the test that the Labor commissioner.

Kathy Kolessa – Human Rights

Yes, we've had the scenario in having disbute, grevience policy procedures, or whatnot, yes they are available. The statute, this is saying, you DON'T owe that employer money, they very well may owe them money, but what we're saying is the method of collecting that money is not proper by just taking it out of the paycheck. [m 15:23]

S Wanzek: What about a bonus?

K Kolessa: No, a bonus is not something that is deducted from a person's paycheck which is what this statute authorizes. Have other labor laws addressing bonuses and a process for that. If an employee believes that he was entitled to a bonus and didn't receive it, the proper process would be to file a wage claim with our agency that would be served on the employer being filed that they weren't entitled to a bonus [how determination was made] [m16:22]

John Risch - Motor Transportation Union - In Favor

Commend committee.

Q? Favor? Opposition?

Bill Schalop – ND Chamber of Commerce – In Opposition

May be parts you need to be a little cautious with. Experience is when you have an employee on the way out, to get them to sign something on the way out is next to impossible. The concern is the general language on lines 13, 14, 15 when talk about loss of stolen property or damaged property, if an employee willfully damages property, you can't collect for that under this wording. [m 19:20 examples] Had employee loaned $7000 so son could have operation, I expect money to be paid back, but if she quits and doesn't sign anything that says she needs to pay it back, including her last checks. According to this, that is illegal. Some languages are pretty broad, some are the "cost of doing business" and should be absorbed by the employer.

S Heitkamp: Members of the ND Chamber of Commerce are against this?

B Schalop: No, I'd be cautious about some of it with a blanket authorization. We're not against it in concept, nor are we against the things the Labor Commissioner described, truck cleaning, breakage, till shortages, all the minor things. Worried about things that may come out.

S Heitkamp: I understand borrowing an employee money, usually when you're borrowing employee money it's because... so by putting this into law it will protect people like yourself.

B Schalop: There are some employees you want to keep and take care of. Any other unclaimed indebtedness, is that so broad that it can't.....

S Heitkamp: You have to comply with the same Federal statues that everyone else does. ND law. Rules are rules.

S Potter: Would you have time to craft amendments that would suit the Chambers' position?

B Schalop: Not sure I'm clever enough.

S Klelin: We'll give ourselves a little bit of time to have this discussion after the hearing.

S Hacker: You have a feeling of unintended consequences with this legislation?

B Schalop: I'm wondering if they aren't, that's correct. But as far as the base bill, no one has a problem with that.

S Hacker: I look at it, if I had a bar and caught a bartender skimming on the till and I fire him on the spot at night when I do my inventory and lost $300, I have to get a signature from this guy and I'm kicking him out of my own bar and say, "Oh, by the way, any inventory that... you need to stick around so that I can count my inventory, so I can tell you how much you skimmed from me and then I'm going to get you to sign this piece of paper? There are specific things that are unintended or could come up.

S Wanzek: What if an employee committed a criminal act in damaging your property and you're aware of that, are you still obligated to not withhold their money?

B Schalop: I'm not sure, going to that whether you shouldn't be allowed to do it, you've got claims in small claims court and criminal court to get at, but as an employer to withhold the check under those conditions.

S Heitkamp: You're talking about a criminal offense, you call the cops, the cops deal with it. If you're putting yourself in a position as an employer, to where you're judge and jury, that's the road they're trying to protect.

S Klein: Goes along with the guy skimming from the bar.

S Heitkamp: There are very few bars that don't have video cameras up.;

B Schalop: I understand your comments, but what if it happens to me today and tomorrow's payday? Both sides should get their due process, but should he get his paycheck, tomorrow, because in your mind...

S Klein: Make sure we're understanding what we're dealing with. Seems to be some things.

You've heard what B. concerns are?

Lisa:

One of the issues raised was lack of opportunity to lend an employee money for $7000. Line 1 on page 2 specifically speaks of employers trying to do good things for an employee can do that. Loan is made up front, what is coming out of the check up front, and if they leave, the amount is taken from the last paycheck.

Regarding stolen property – I agree with committee that is a criminal action. At this time if an employee steals from the till, you can't take that money from his paycheck under the current statute, it's not a authorized deduction. So this does not do anything to change that, just spells out what has to be authorized. If the person who skims the till agrees to sign an authorization because he doesn't want you to criminally prosecute him, then you can deduct from his paycheck. They might want to withdraw pretty quickly. Garnishment, whether or not their would be any money left, that's the purpose to protect employees. Employers are in position where if an employee is indebted to them, they're going to be holding the power of the paycheck, and you have to give employees enough money to live on. If damages occur, you shouldn't be deducting them at such a rate that you will put somebody into the poor house. Example [m 28.52]

Q?

S Wanzek: If not skimming or embezzling, or arson, you can't say, "Listen, I believe that's what you did, I'm going to report it to authorities, your employee situation is discontinued here and I'm going to hold your paychecks until we go to court." I can't do that.

Lisa: That would be a violation of state law as it currently exists; it was not authorized.

Also would be a violation of proposed amendment. Unless they authorized it, you can't keep the paycheck.

S Wanzek: I do understand that you are innocent until proven guilty. I can appreciate it from that standpoint.

S Hacker: Do you see this happen in mechanic shops? Mechanic shops provide mechanics tools and actually fund them their tools. The tools lots of times, they are charged back to the employees, what happens if a month later the employee gets laid off and has $2000 worth of tools and walks off the job – that's not stealing – but where does the money come from to pay for those tools?

Kathy: Authorization, "We provided you with these tools and they're our property, but we're going to be withholding $50 per pay period for example until the value of $500 or whatever amount has been paid for. If you leave employment before they are paid for (spelled out), If you leave before that money has been paid you have 2 options: Release the tools and basically you've rented them for that $50 per paycheck while you were here, and if you take them, you owe them the balance due, but, the method of collection is NOT withhold your entire paycheck."

Minutes:

Chair Keiser opened the hearing on SB 2110.

Lisa Fair McEvers, Commissioner of Labor: See written testimony #1.

Rep. Clark: Could you summarize in a couple of sentences exactly what this bill does?

Lisa: It does exactly what the current statute is supposed to do, which is that employers can't take things out of somebody's check without them authorizing in writing specifically what they're taking out, and at the time contemporaneous with the debt being occurred.

Rep. Clark: Does it also allow for an automatic withdrawal then for a 401K plan where an employer now can blanket his employees, and unless they opt out start an account for them in a 401K plan?

Lisa: Yes, that is what the reference in section 1 of this is meant to make clear. That they may deduct from those contributions as long as they're following the federal regulations, and that's why I put that in there. Even if we hadn't of put that in there, you could have done it, because the federal law says they're preempting all state laws, and they're superseding them. I wanted employers to have a place to look in state law to know whether they could do that or not, because we did get calls on that issue.

Rep. Kasper: You said under the federal automatic withholding, what notice is required to be given to the employee that the withholdings going to begin, unless they opt out? Will the ND employer be required to follow that procedure?

Lisa: I don't know the exact notice requirements that are required by ARISA, but yes ND employers would have to follow whatever federal regulations there are. I know that they have to be given a notice that they can opt out, and there's a time requirement in there.

Rep. Kasper: Let's say that employee opts in, or doesn't opt out, so they automatically opt in, under federal statute down the road, do they have the opportunity to change their election to go to an opt out scenario, simply because for whatever reason they wish to go to an opt out situation?

Lisa: It's my understanding that they are given the opportunity, but there are also some timing requirements. I think they have an annually opportunity to opt out, but that might depend on the particular plan that they have as well, because there are a number of qualified plans out there.

Rep. Kasper: Let's say that the federal law for the opt out on the 401K plan is once per year. Could we as a state be more generous? Could we state in this bill that on the opt out provision the employee could opt out once every 6 months, as opposed to going with the more stringent to the employees perspective?

Lisa: My understanding is that the state cannot do anything. The federal law supersedes state law in all areas on this, so they have to follow the requirements under the original formulas, and under the Pension Protection Act of 2006.

Rep. Kasper: Generally, on the federal mandate, if a state passes a law that is more generous, or friendly to the participant, they generally allow it, but they generally have the parameters like if you opt out it's got to be for a year. In most cases the federal government allows a more generous look by a state such as a quarterly or semiannual opt out.

Lisa: That is the case generally speaking, but I haven't seen any provisions that discuss that. Only that this act supersedes all state laws in regard to these types of plans.

Rep. Kasper: Federal law might say that if you opt in, you cannot opt out at least once per year, you must be given an opportunity to drop out. However, if federal law says at least once per year, that's the threshold, and if the state law said at least once per quarter, we would be even more generous to the person who this is subject to. I'm wondering if you could find out if we could allow more generous opt out provisions for you.

Lisa: I would be happy to look into that.

Rep. Ruby: In subsection 2, I've always been under the impression that if an employer had some thing where there's damage, whether it's stolen property, whether it's some kind of grievance, or money owed from an employee, that they didn't have the authority to withhold that from their pay. If they wanted to recover that they would have to go through small claims court. I thought that was already spelled out in their law, apparently not.

Lisa: It is, but we have employers who view the current language which stops, and they want to use the phrase individual items, and have it cover something. Let's say there's a policy manual, they believe that's specific enough, even if it's signed on the first day of employment, and there's no idea how much is going to be owed in the future. If they say you owe $10 for your keys, if you don't turn them in they think that's specific enough, and we don't recognize that, because it doesn't give the employee any opportunity to dispute whether or not they did turn the keys back in. There isn't any opportunity for them to say, no I did it. So, they're just deducting it from the check, and they're not checking for the authorizing of that specific item.

Rep. Ruby: As far as once you spell this out, that's going to supersede all those previously signed policy manuals, correct?

Lisa: That's correct, but as I said the department's policy since 1993 is that even if they are using those policies, we haven't been recognizing them as valid policies. We get a lot of wage claims that involve the use of these types of policy manuals which the employers believe authorize the deduction, because they have their employee sign the policy manual.

Rep. Ruby: How come under collective bargaining agreement they can? Are most employers not receiving the same section in state law?

Lisa: This bill is marbled on a statute in the state of Minnesota, and my understanding is the reason that collective bargaining is excluded is because they have some means to go through when they have a union representing them to air their grievances, and perhaps get some protection from the union. So, we're not trying to void any agreements if they have a union agreement about uniforms or about different things like that if that's part of a collective bargain. That gives the employee more power when they are part of the union, and an individual who's dealing solely with an employer; they have somebody else to go to, to complain to, and to try to have whatever the protections that are provided by their union contract to help them out.

Rep. Dosch: If an employer lends money to an employee, as long as it's spelled out at the time their lending out the money, the dollars through the period is going to be deducted if that is an acceptable form of deductions?

Lisa: Yes. We're not trying to prohibit a generous employer from trying to help the employee in requiring the employee to pay it back, so that's why there's that specific exception.

Rep. Ruby: I do give advances to my employees on occasions, and I do withhold that, and I failed to receive their written obligation on that. So, I guess to protect myself, I should.

Lisa: You should, and you should have been doing it under the current statute as well.

Rep. Dosch: In the events of keys, the employer really has no recourse in those types of situations? You have your maintenance guy, who has 2 dozen different master keys, and he walks out with the keys, you have no recourse?

Lisa: You do have recourse. They can either authorize the deduction from their last paycheck, or you can take them to small claims court like you would every other debtor, or anybody else who stole from you. You could report them to law enforcement for theft if they haven't turned them back in.

Rep. Amerman: If I broke something, and the employer wanted me to pay for it. The only way he could do that is I have to sign off to so much deduction, and by law like this I really wouldn't have to do that, but if I didn't do that and he said you do it or your fired, so the employee really doesn't have that choice anyway. Is that correct?

Lisa: I wouldn't necessarily agree with that, because we do have another statute out there that prohibits retaliation by an employer against an employee in such situations.

Rep. Kasper: I'll give you a couple of scenarios. I own an apartment house, and I've got 24 apartment units in there, and I have a manager of the apartment units who has the master key to every apartment in the building. You terminate employment, give him one days notice, and find a little note on your desk. He runs off with the keys to every apartment, and I try to contact this person, and they refuse. You're telling me that in that scenario, I'm going to have to change every lock, the outside locks to protect the people in that building, and this bill says to bad, the only way I'm going to be able to collect the money out of his last pay check is if I take him to court. Is that correct?

Lisa: Yes, and no. Under this you couldn't hold his last paycheck, because the paycheck has to be paid out in the next regular payday in the course of business. Yes, you would have to take him to small claims court, but what I'm saying is then under our present statute, we are interpreting it based off of legislative intent, that you couldn't have done that under the old statute. Your proper course is to go to small claims court to show what they owe you.

Rep. Vigesaa: How about this automatic 401K situation. How does an employee, and employer decide then what percentage of the amount is going to be deducted? Can the employer set that?

Lisa: My understanding is that there is a base amount on these automatic plans, and I think it's set by the employer. That is why they give the employee notice, so that if they don't want that taken out, they can opt out.

Rep. Vigesaa: There would be no option for the employer to take more then the base amount under your bill?

Lisa: That is correct.

Rep. Kasper: On the 401K plan, does the law require the employer when he takes the 3% out of the employee's paycheck, because the employee would not do the paperwork? Where does the employer invest the money in the 401K accounts? Who's liable if that fund is performing poorly?

Lisa: I don't know the answer to that question. I would think that it would depend on the type of plan that they have, and every one of these plans has a fiduciary, they have a trust officer, and that is who is going to be answerable to whatever investments are made by the plan. Ultimately, the employer is responsible, I believe, for the actions of the trustee.

Rep. Kasper: If an employer has a 401K plan where the employees make their individual elections, and individual investment choices. Then if the array of investments meets a certain federal guideline, the fiduciary's responsibility for the results of those investments is now the employee, not the employer, so in this type of an automatic check off, you now may have it totally different. You may have a problem the employer is not aware of, simply because this sounds like a good deal, but the employer isn't informed. This is a pretty big step.

Lisa: It's my understanding that the employer would have to adopt the plan in the first place in order to offer them, so they would understand all the parameters of the plan.

Rep. Keiser: For automatic deduction plans, the federal government does have relatively well defined guidelines on what kind of plans; funds are acceptable for those non directed funds.

Lisa: That reference to the Automatic Contribution Fund, we're not really authorizing anything. All I'm trying to do here is give notice that the federal government is authorizing them, and I'm just trying to give them a reference, because they can do it right now.

Rep. Dosch: In our company, they can distribute anywhere from 1% to 50% of their pay.

Under federal law, what determines what level?

Lisa: You probably don't have an automatic 401K, you probably have a 401K that everyone opted in, and so the plans are different for opt in versus opt out. They're much more stringent on the opt out plan.

Rep. Amerman: If the federal government, because of changing times, and powers are being changed, this automatic contribution plan that they put in place, and that we have to abide by from what you're saying goes away, but this wouldn't automatically go away, we'd have to make this go away, because we have it in the state statute?

Lisa: I don't believe we'd have to, because if that perdition is gone, there's no reference. That's the only thing we're doing is referencing that they have to follow the plan as it's provided in that act, and if that act is repealed, our provision would be none invoid, and it would have no affect.

Rep. Thorpe: I was in one of those automatic plans, and you mentioned fiduciary, and that is the one that looks after the plan. Are they also the beneficiary?

Lisa: The beneficiary would be the participant in the plan. The fiduciary would be the trustee who's in charge of making sure all the benefits are invested, and are paid out, and doing all those things. Basically, they are looking out for all of the participants in the plan who would be the beneficiaries of the plan.

John Risch, United Transportation Union: Support SB 2110. The first section that allows for the automatic opting is a very positive overall for employees. They still have the right, of course, to opt out. The second section just makes things a lot clearer, and helps establish what the current practices are.

Minutes:

Chair Keiser opened the discussion on SB 2110.

Rep. Clark: We had a meeting one morning with Lisa Fair McEvers on this bill. Rep. Kasper had an objection to the automatic withholding contribution plan authorizing section 1, because it's completely preempted by federal law, it is covered by federal law, so his argument was why put it into code. Upon the balance of the bill authorizing, or outlining where employers can make deductions, Rep. Dosch crafted a specific amendment that we discussed with the Labor Commissioner, and she didn't like the amendment very well. So, she agreed to go back and craft an amendment that would try and satisfy everybody, and then later on she sent me an email that said she had no objection to deleting the automatic contribution part of the bill. She said she hadn't been able to come up with an amendment that she liked, and she suggested we just plain kill this bill, rather than craft some amendment that would be different than existing law. I move a do not pass.

Rep. Boe: Second.

Rep. Ruby: I'm wondering what the issue was with Rep. Dosch, why he'd like to have removal, or change.

Rep. Dosch: I wanted to put something on there that were specific instances where an employer would have the right to withhold some defying check when an employer is given specific property, and a specific dollar amount at that time, for example, keys or even the vehicle. They quit their job, and they don't bring the vehicle back, the employer is on recourse to go through the hoops. I thought it would be better if an employee knows $2 or $500 is going to be withheld from that final paycheck. I thought it would be reasonable in very specific cases to say here you're given these keys that are worth $200, and if you terminate employment you have to turn those keys back in.

Rep. Ruby: I'm under the impression that's already existing law to withhold that from the last paycheck.

Rep. Keiser: That's correct, but Rep. Dosch's amendment would say under certain circumstances it would be.

Rep. Clark: He would add one more exception to the existing law.

Rep. Keiser: What does this bill do that she doesn't currently do?

Rep. Dosch: I believe she just wanted to clarify putting in state code something that's really federal just as a clarification, but I don't think it really does much of anything.

Rep. Ruby: If Rep. Dosch had crafted an amendment that literally says that would be a violation of federal, or can we do that?

Rep. Dosch: I don't have an issue with killing the bill. The amendment will be perhaps another battle for another day.

Rep. Keiser: I don't oppose killing the bill. You'll notice that one of the exceptions is instead of the collective bargaining agreement, because there are parties involved that know what's going on. Rep. Dosch is absolutely right. How are you going to get an employee who's taking some of your property to sign a release to withhold money from their check? It's going to be tough to do.

Rep. Clark: You can't preauthorize it, because that would be illegal, so you'd have to do it after they left.
